Empowering people for Palestinian sustainable development: it is the challenging mission of MICAD, the first Master program offered by Bethlehem University. Established in cooperation with three prestigious European universities, and supported by a wide network of Palestinian and international partners, MICAD aims at providing a multidisciplinary background to the builders of sustainable development. The program includes academic subjects such as economics, international relations and social studies, as well as technical topics covering the project-design procedures used by non governmental organizations and international agencies. A powerful tool for capacity building, MICAD focuses on the different perspectives of Palestinian development within the Middle Eastern context, and the wider framework of today's globalised world.
