Occupational Therapy Service Learning Programs in the Palestinian Community

Content:

Service learning is a key element of the occupational therapy program and has been since the inception of occupational therapy at Bethlehem University.

One example is the final clinical course -OCTH406- run two months before students graduate. Students are tasked to find an organization in which it does not provide occupational therapy services and after submitting a proposal provide services appropriate to the organization's needs.

This course is a unique and successful experience for the students where they can improve their personal and professional skills as well as serving the community.
